

Editorial for Journal 46

The Society has had another busy year answering a steady flow of questions from students and members. Our local schools have realised we can help with artefacts and talks covering colonialism which now features in the National Curriculum and we have a number of such talks and presentation looming in December and the New Year. One school has been so enthusiastic that they have opened the talks to parents, which has proved to be of great interest.

Many of the other queries received relate to medals, and Dr David Payne has answered some of the questions with an article. Likewise, Cameron Simpson, our South Africa correspondent and researcher, has provided a fascinating and in-depth article about the Frontier Light Horse.

Ian Knight is still taking tours to the battlefields – they continue to be of great interest to members. Details of Ian's tours can be obtained from the Society.

Our plan for an exhibition in Kent has been postponed until Autumn 2020 due to refurbishment of the host museum; details will be announced in the next Journal.

With this year now drawing to a close, I wish all our members a peaceful break over the Christmas and New Year period.
